PSCI 433 Service Learning Abroad
This three-week course combines upper-level academic study, volunteerism, and travel abroad, all of which can be seen as important components of leadership in a globalized environment. To accomplish course objectives, the program relies on service-learning, a teaching strategy that integrates meaningful community service with instruction and reflection to enrich the learning experience and teach civic responsibility.

During July 2015, a group of students will travel to Rabat, Morocco to work with disadvantaged children. Citadel students will teach English as well as principles of leadership and ethics.

While performing the duties of their volunteer placements, students will undertake coursework on the politics of economic development.

Enrollment is with instructor approval. This course is open to students of all majors.

Contact:
International Studies Office or Dr. Sarah Tenney Sharman